Editorial

The well-known trading adage ‘Sell in May and go away’, which advises investors to stay away from the financial markets from May to November, does not seem to have been very popular so far this year, at least not on Warrants & Certificates on NYSE Euronext. The value traded on Warrants & Certificates in May 2013 was nearly identical to that of April 2013 (-0.6%). In terms of number of trades, we saw a slight decrease of 2.5% last month over the previous month with a total of nearly 325K transactions – a positive given that May is traditionally a month of bank holidays in France, and this year many of them fell on weekdays (during which the Exchange remained open).

In the Netherlands, activity remained strong. On NYSE Euronext Amsterdam in May 2013 the total Warrants & Certificates value traded was up 1.5% and the number of trades was up nearly 4% vs. April 2013. In terms of daily averages in May 2013 the value traded was down by only 1.5% and the number of trades was up by 3.5% vs. May 2012.

Total value traded in Warrants & Certificates on NYSE Euronext Paris in May 2013 was down by just under 7% and the number of trades was down 12% vs. April 2013 – probably attributable to holidays. Looking at daily averages for May 2013, the value traded was down by 28% and the number of trades was down by 27% vs. May 2012.

In terms of product type, the ‘Leveraged KO Open-End BEST’ reached new heights last month. While in January it represented 4.8% of all product types, trading in the ‘Leveraged KO Open-End BEST’ products has increased by 10 percentage points this year to a new record level of nearly 15%, representing a daily average value traded of €8.8 million.

To provide market participants with a CAC 40 index level indicator outside of the standard NYSE Euronext trading hours, NYSE Euronext launched the CAC 40 Ext Index in May (ISIN QS0011252754). The index is calculated every 15 seconds between 08:00 and 18:30 CET on the basis of the first month futures contract traded on the NYSE Liffe exchange, adjusted for interest payments and dividends. This new index is particularly adapted for Warrants & Certificates as they share the same extended trading hours and is therefore well suited to become a popular underlying index for structured products.
